Billie-The-Bartender

As the barmaid and bookkeeper of the cantina, you consider yourself an integral part of the Deadwood Cantina. Because of your long-standing relationship with Harry High-Stakes (the cantina owner) Harry trusts you immensely. Just three months ago, Harry asked you to start managing the cantina finances. You are honored that Harry would ask you to take on this task instead of his business partner, Henrietta. Although you have been doing your best to make the finances balance and to keep the accounting straight, somehow the sales and the profits do not match. The only conclusion you can draw is that someone must be stealing from the cantina. Until you can figure out who is to blame for the losses, you have decided to keep quiet about the situation.

As the barmaid for the Deadwood Cantina, you lead a rather comfy life. You have grown accustomed to the regulars that frequent the cantina and you would hate to lose your lifestyle because of the cantina's financial troubles. Because you have been responsible for the financial ends of the cantina, you are aware that the bank has been threatening to repossess the cantina, which is the last thing that you want to happen. If the bank does repossess the cantina, there are rumors that Banker Bob (the bank owner) will sell the cantina to Montgomery Money (an investor). Under Montgomery's control, you fear the investor will care little for the establishment, its customers or its employees.

Among other things, your job provides you with the opportunity to spend time with Poker Alice (the poker dealer). Over time, you have come to know Alice quite well and think you may be growing devoted to her. Because Alice keeps her emotions hidden, you are not sure if she feels the same way for you. Although you are only loyal to Alice, you have noticed Barb Cassidy (a bandit) shows you a great amount of attention while in the cantina. Unfortunately, you are not interested in teaming up with Barb Cassidy and you are trying hard to find a way to let Barb down easy. The last thing you want to do is make an enemy out of an outlaw!

Despite your feelings for Alice, your main goal is to keep your job by keeping the finances of the cantina in order. Although the tournament was supposed to bring in a great amount of profits, it has not. After Harry pays out the winner of the tournament, the cantina will not have enough money to repay the bank and the cantina will have to close its doors forever. If the cantina goes out of business, you do not know what you, or any of the other cantina employees, will do.

With the Deadwood Poker Tournament Party quickly approaching, you are excited for the event to happen. Although you cannot see the party making as much money as you need to dig the cantina out of debt, Harry insists that by the end of the night, you will have more than enough money to pay the bank back in full! With that reassurance, you are excited for the party and all the customers that you will service!

Acting and Dressing Your Part: As the barmaid for the cantina, you are suave and debonair and have a way of complimenting each of the customers in your bar. You have learned it earns you better tips!
